Global Health Standalone Course with Graduate Credits

September 4 - October 30, 2024 / 2:30 - 5:30 pm / Every Wednesday and Friday

The Master of Science in Public Health (MSPH) Programme is pleased to announce the standalone course scheduled for September - December 2024. This course is part of the programme curriculum but can also be taken without enrolling in a degree programme. Course credits can contribute towards a master's degree.

Course Description

This course is planned to familiarize students with global health concepts and evolution with an understanding and analysis of policies and practices of global health. This course will provide a broader understanding of different expressions of global health policy discourse, the intricacies of the policy process, the actors and institutions involved and its political economy. The course will further highlight the health challenges of communicable and non-communicable diseases, pandemics, and epidemics from a global perspective and their undesirable impact with a focus on low and middle-income countries (LMICs).

The course will also focus on various stakeholders involved at the global level in health and their power structures, political and other influential players, decision making processes and the external factors involved in agenda setting, policy formulation and implementation. This Global Health course is also aimed at developing an understanding of the relationship between health and the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), their influence on human and social development, and how these can be ensured and measured. The aspect of climate change and its impact on global health will also be covered. Student learning and analytical understanding will be consolidated with case studies as well as specific readings on different topics through selected texts. The assessment of this course entails presentations, reflective essays and final project report.

Course credits can contribute towards a master's degree:

Candidates who will achieve a cGPA of 3.5 or above after completing two courses or a cGPA of 3.0 or above after completing three courses are exempted from writing the Admission Test. They will be required to appear for an interview. The courses are valid for three years only for entry into the MSPH programme.
